LEADERSHIP SOURCE MODEL

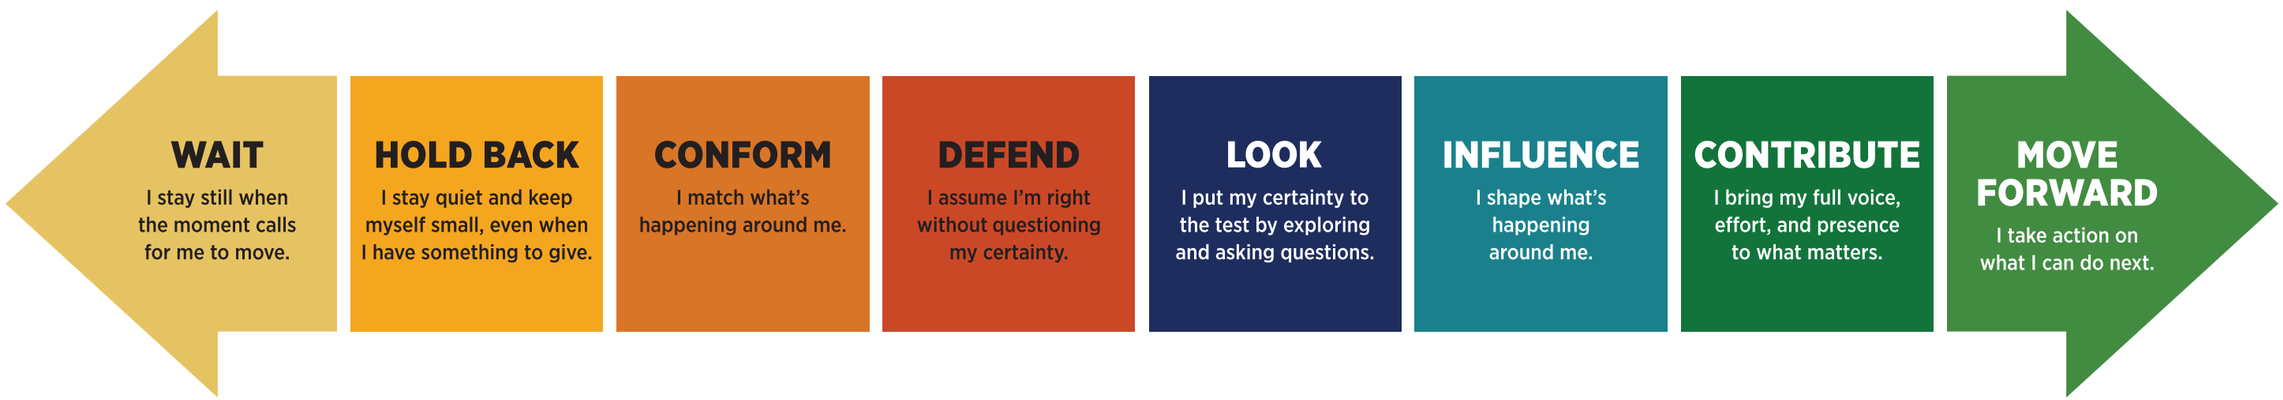
Leadership Has a Source, and It Will Produce Breakthroughs or More of the Same

More of the Same

The destination you end up with when leadership is sourced from a limiting story. It's not failure, it's familiar. Things stay stuck, go in circles or feel like constant effort without real change.

Breakthrough

A result that wasn't going to happen unless something about your personal leadership shifted. It's not a small win or improvement, rather a meaningful, visible change that comes from standing in your commitment.



Limiting Story

A belief that feels true and familiar but keeps you stuck. It usually shows up as a protective explanation, e.g., why something can't change, why someone won't change or why you're stuck the way you are. It's often automatic, unexamined and invisible until named.

Commitment

What you're out to cause, and who you'll be while causing it. It's not a task to fulfill, rather a declaration. It gives you a place to stand when the going gets tough, shaping how you move, speak, listen and lead.
